LEGACY SOCIETY

Achieving Independence For Life

You Can Make a Brighter Future for People with Disabilities

Favarh was founded in 1958 by a group of families who refused to accept the status quo for their children with intellectual and developmental disabilities (IDD). When job opportunities didn't exist, they created them. When access to services like a fair education was denied, they took matters into their own hands and built their own classrooms. When they faced resistance and skepticism in their community, they educated their peers and created allies and advocates.

Today, people with disabilities are vital members of their communities. They are integrated into schools, contributing to the workforce, and living independently.

People with disabilities—and Favarh—would not be where we are today without the dedication of the families who paved the way. But our work is not done.

We are proud to announce the Favarh Legacy Society, honoring both the families who have brought us this far and those who continue to build a brighter future for people with IDD today.

Together, we can safeguard the safety, well-being, and independence of our loved ones with IDD and continue to advocate for the rights and opportunities our community deserves.

Donor Story – Rick and Fay Lenz

When our son Danny was born, several doctors told us he might never be able to walk or talk.

Back in 1980, the programs and services available to people with IDD were just as limited as the expectations laid out for Danny. We were told he would likely end up in a sheltered workshop, isolated from his community and deprived of opportunities to lead a fulfilling life.

We refused to accept this limited future for our son and resolved to do everything we could to help Danny live as independently as possible.

As a young man, Danny benefited from special education teachers who pushed him academically, as well as his five wonderful older brothers, who included him, mentored him, and helped him develop socially.

At Favarh, Danny continues to flourish. He works in an integrated workplace, actively participates in community events at Favarh and Holy Family, and has achieved his dream of living independently in his own apartment—just like his brothers.

Danny is even the emcee for Favarh's theater program. Every year, he stands in front of hundreds of audience members to introduce the show. He has perfected his comedic timing and always gets a few good belly laughs from the audience. How's that for talking?

We are part of the Favarh Legacy Society because our son was born into a world that wasn't ready for him. If we had accepted the path originally laid out for Danny, he never would have had the opportunity to grow into the more self-sufficient person he is today. We want to protect the opportunities we fought so hard to create and continue building a future for people with IDD that is better than anything we could have imagined.
